

I am presently pleased with Indiana's Telephone Privacy law. It has helped reduce unwanted solicitation phone calls. I now rarely receive annoying and unwanted calls. I believe that the FCC should not implement any proposal that would reduce the effectiveness of this law in our State. If the FCC determines there is a need to implement a proposal it should at minimum be as restrictive as our existing law or should have the provision that any State's more restrictive laws would take precedence over the FCC proposal. I realize that some states have no laws or have weak laws, but in no way should the FCC implement something that would weaken existing laws on this matter.

Please respect the work that has already been done in this State and others. My family's quality of life has been enhanced with the reduction in these unwanted calls. I used to get as many as 2-4 calls per day, now I get less than one call per week. Individuals and families should not be held hostage by unwanted telemarketers who intrude in homes and lives. Thank you for your concern and consideration of this matter.

Joyce Parson